Basically, your Windows partition needs to be the first partition on your hard drive, it should be the primary partition. Then you need to have the OS loader partition – this is the partition that can be booted from (as in the CD) without being checked to see if it is a partition or not. It needs to be located after the first partition and before the last partition. Then, to install the Debian Linux loader, you need to: Insert a Linux boot disk. Add it to your bootloader with a command line. Go to the grub command line (e.g., GRUB> ), and add it to your bootloader with a command line. At this point, you need to 82157476af
